TWO SMALL OIL PORTRAITS BY DURER, BOUGHT BY N.Y. LAWYER IN 1946 FOR $500, SAID TO BE WORTH $1-MILLION

Two small paintings believed to be by Albrecht Dürer and worth at least $1-million have turned up in the collection of a lawyer who purchased them in New York for $500 in 1946. The Dürer paintings have been missing from a German castle since World War II, says the New York Times. Scholars consider the discovery one of the most important art finds in many years.

One prominent art scholar estimated that the two Dürer works were worth $1-million.

The lawyer, Edward I. Ellicofon, is sixty-two years old and has been collecting art for many years. He said he had bought the paintings "from a young man who said he was sent to me by a friend of mine."

The paintings hung unrecognized on a wall near a staircase in Mr. Ellicofon's home at 1100 East 19th Street in the Flatbush section of Brooklyn. Their background was discovered only several weeks ago.

Dürer is believed to have painted them in 1499. They are portraits of Hans and Felicitas Tucher, members of a prominent merchant family in Weimar. Each painting, oil on wood, is 11 by 9 1/2 inches.

The paintings, now in a bank vault, have been examined by curators of the Metropolitan Museum of Art. The museum, with the approval of Mr. Ellicofon, has notified the U.S. State Department "in view of the possible uncertainty of title."

One day in 1946, Mr. Ellicofon said, a man "about 25 to 30 years old" came to Mr. Ellicofon's home saying "he was sent to me, by a friend of mine."

Underneath his arm the man carried a package containing eight paintings which he said he had bought in Europe. Mr. Ellicofon picked out the two portraits, "dickered with the young man" over the price and finally agreed on $500, which he paid in cash, says the New York Times. He said the man gave him a receipt but that, after twenty years, he had been unable to find it.

"I never saw him or heard from him again," Mr. Ellicofon said. He added that it was not unusual for people to drop by his home with art items to sell.

Several weeks ago, Mr. Ellicofon said, one of his friends, Gerard Stern, of 608 West End Avenue, an art researcher and dealer, spotted reproductions of the portraits in "Lost Art Treasures," a book recently published in West Germany. Mr. Stern remembered having seen the paintings in the Ellicofon home. He went to the lawyer's office at 401 Broadway and they decided to take the paintings to the Metropolitan.

The German book noted that the paintings had hung for many years in the Grand Ducal Museum in Weimar, now in East Germany.

Early in World War II, the paintings were among 121 art treasures moved from Weimar for safe-keeping to a castle at Schwarzburg in Thuringia, now an East German state. Hundreds of other paintings from various collections were stored in the castle.

Miss Ardella R. Hall, who helped to recover thousands of stolen war treasures as arts and monuments officer of the U.S. State Department from 1945 to 1962, said in a telephone interview from Washington that the two portraits were among eight works missing from the castle when it was occupied by American forces in the spring of 1945.

"We conducted a big investigation trying to trace those eight paintings, but we got nowhere," Miss Hall said. "Among the eight were works by Cranach the Elder and Friedrich."

Theodore Rousseau, the Metropolitan's curator of European paintings, said after examining the portraits:

"As far as I can make out, these are the paintings reproduced in the book. The book states that they are reproductions of the paintings that were in Weimar. Scholars who studied the paintings in Weimar almost all agree that they are by Dürer."

Prof. Erwin Panofsky, of Princeton University, one of the world's leading art scholars and an authority on Dürer, said that the two Dürer portraits he saw in Weimar many years ago, reports the New York Times, were "perfectly genuine" and "really first-rate."

The works are believed to have been part of a set of four portraits. A third portrait, of Elspeth Tucher, is in a museum in Kassel, West Germany. The fourth portrait, of her husband, Nicolas, presumably was lost long ago.

On the back of the portrait of Hans Tucher, Dürer painted the Tucher family coat-of-arms.

Miss Hall said: "Under the Hague Convention, the two portraits cannot be kept in the United States. Our Government has returned many stolen art objects that have been found in this country to West Germany. Since we do not have relations with East Germany, we cannot transfer property to Weimar. What we have done in the past is to transfer objects to a West German trusteeship organization that handles stolen property."

She said, "The West German Government, if necessary, can sue for possession of the portraits in a New York court."

Some observers said the legal issues were so complicated that Mr. Ellicofon, if he desired, could hold the paintings for many years before the case was settled. There is a possibility that he might be able to keep the paintings, according to some experts.

Mr. Ellicofon said he expected to be informed by the State Department about the question of ownership. He said he was considering a showing of the paintings and would donate the proceeds to Jewish charities as "a form of poetic retribution."

Mr. Ellicofon, who was born in Latvia, came to New York with his family at the age of four years. He is a small, stocky, gray-haired man. He graduated from New York University, reports the New York Times, and was admitted to the bar in 1929.

He is a member of the New York County Lawyers Association and the Brooklyn Bar Association. His house contains paintings, bronzes, porcelains, and other objects of art. A widower, he has four children. He is a brother of Eliot Ellicofon, the photographer.

Dürer, who was born in Nuremberg in 1471, the son of a goldsmith, ranks with the handful of world masters. He died in 1528. About one hundred of his oils have survived.

A Dürer engraving, "The Knight, Death and the Devil," was among the art treasures appropriated by Hitler for his private collection from a Nuremberg museum. It was returned when a United States Army officer, not knowing the rightful owner, bought it in Germany and sent it to Washington asking that "proper disposition be made of it."

Thousands of art treasures plundered in World War II are still sought throughout the world. Government agencies in France, Italy, Germany, Austria, Poland, and the Soviet Union are quietly working to track down paintings, sculptures, tapestries, and rare books worth hundreds of millions of dollars.

Among the missing items are paintings by Titian, Raphael, Caravaggio, Tintoretto, Fragonard, Van Gogh, and Cézanne. Most of the treasures were stolen by the Nazis. But many were taken by Russian and American soldiers, says the New York Times, German factory workers, Polish farmers, Italian peasants and other people.

Surcharges Result Of "Go-Slow" By Haifa Stevedores

A twenty per cent surcharge on shipping between Israel and western Europe went into effect because of congestion in Haifa harbor resulting from a "go-slow" by stevedores, says the London Times. The surcharge has been imposed by the United Kingdom-Israel and Israel-United Kingdom shipping conferences representing seven British lines and one Israeli line. A similar measure was taken by the Continent-Near East and Levant-Continent shipping conferences on behalf of twenty lines plying between Mediterranean and Continental ports.

Transatlantic cargo rates are not affected, but an agent for the American Export Lines said they were to be reviewed in the light of losses due to the strike.

Haifa's 1,600 stevedores have been going slow since April 24 demanding wage increases of some thirty per cent in their new labour contracts. They have been working to rule.

The stevedores are employed by a contracting company run by Sotol Ranch, a corporation owned by the General Federation of Labour (Histadrut). The contractors have said the higher wages would necessitate an increase in handling fees but the Government, which owns the port, has opposed it. Port dues were substantially raised in February and a further increase is out of the question.

Histadrut headquarters, which decided earlier this year on a ten per cent limit on wage increases for 1966, has also opposed the stevedores' demands. The port workers, who are an important political force in Haifa apart from sitting astride a vital economic service, already have enviable conditions.

The political power of the port workers derives from their tradi-

Thinkers From Nine Latin Countries Protest Soviet Anti-Jewish Bias

Intellectuals from nine Latin American countries issued an appeal in Mexico City, Mexico, for an end of Russian discrimination against Jews living in the Soviet Union. The appeal, which will be communicated to the Soviet Embassy, also requested, says the New York Times, that Soviet Jews separated from their families as a result of Nazi persecution be allowed to rejoin them in other parts of the world.

More than thirty professors, novelists, poets, journalists, and former cabinet ministers from Colombia, Venezuela, Mexico, Guatemala, Honduras, Nicaragua, Costa Rica, Salvador, and Panama voted to take this step at a two-day conference.

The meeting was strongly attacked by two left-wing publications in Mexico City and by the Soviet Embassy.

In a message to the conference from London, Bertrand Russell, the philosopher, charged that the anti-religion campaign in the Soviet Union was practiced with "exceptional vigor against the Jews."

Expressing the views of many of the participants, the conference president, Martin Luis Guzman, a Mexican novelist, declared that the Soviet Jews were in danger of ethnic, cultural, and religious extinction if discrimination against them was not checked.

After having flourished as a minority group in Russia under Lenin, he said, the Jews under Stalin became the victims of a persecution that continues, though in diminished form, says the New York Times. It was charged at the conference that there are virtually no Jewish theaters, libraries, or schools in the Soviet Union.

International Research Will Seek Answer Over Seven-Year Period, To Question Of Human Mass Murder By "Whole Societies"

What is it that makes people feel not only justified in destroying others but that they have a duty to do so?

This question of human cruelty and destructiveness, which had its supreme example in the Nazi persecution of European Jewry, is to be studied by an international research group over a seven-year period. Work has already been started in Britain and on the Continent, and it is hoped that large portions of the study will be carried out in the United States.

Details of the pioneering study, to be conducted by a newly established Center for Research in Collective Psycho-pathology and focusing on the processes by which certain social groups come to be regarded as sub-human and hence liable to persecution and even extermination, were described by David Astor, editor of the London Observer, at a luncheon session at the diplomatic reception rooms of the U.S. State Department in Washington, that concluded the 60th anniversary annual meeting of the American Jewish Committee.

Mr. Astor said that many studies of the traditional side of man as an individual existed. However, he deplored the lack of studies of whole "societies which do big killings."

Characterizing the mass murders in Nazi Germany and in Russia under Stalin as "political madness," Mr. Astor declared that "irrational fantasies were an integral part of the whole process whereby World War II came about."

A recurrence of such irrational behavior, he said, "may lead us toward a catastrophic world war."

Involved in the project are specialists in the areas of dynamic psychology, social anthropology, sociology, history, and politics.

They include Dr. Norman Cohn, a historian and a psychologist, who will direct the project in Britain; Dr. Joan Westcott, an American anthropologist; Dr. Zevadai Barbu, a British sociologist; Dr. Leon Poliakov, a French historian and authority on Nazi crimes; and Anthony Stone, a British psychoanalyst and expert on the psychology of aggression.

Mr. Astor said that Nazi mass-killing was not an isolated phenomenon but rather "the most extreme of a whole gradation of killing processes that were going on at the time." The Nazis, he explained, killed not only Jews but also huge numbers of Poles and Russians, while in more recent times Stalinist Russia killed "thousands upon thousands." Hindus and Muslims "are equally capable of seeing each other murderously," he added.

"All these examples of mass-killing, when the motivation has been partly or wholly irrational, cannot be without significance," he continued. "Indeed, its significance, when we have understood it, is bound to throw light on the rest of politics."

Mr. Astor acknowledged that many studies of the irrational side of man as an individual exist, but pointed to the lack of studies of man within the group.

"This pattern of studies is not at all satisfactory," he said. "For it is not individuals, acting as individuals, who kill many people, they only, at most, kill one or two. Nor is it delinquent gangs. Their worst riots could only kill people in very small numbers. It is societies which do the big killings. An Eichmann is only a harmless nechanic or at worst an individual murderer, until society tells him that he may, and indeed ought, to kill. Then people, even quite ordinary people, seem capable of going to almost any lengths."

Mr. Astor, it has been learned, first broached the subject of such research publicly at a meeting in London in April, 1962, commemorating the Warsaw ghetto uprising of April, 1943. Following publication of his talk, Prof. Norman Cohn, a noted historian of persecutory and exterminatory creeds and movements, gave up an academic appointment to translate Mr. Astor's suggestion into reality. Several years of discussions followed with specialists in dynamic psychology, social anthropology, sociology, history, and politics.

Out of these discussions came the establishment early this year of the Center for Research in Collective Psycho-pathology, under the auspices of the University of Sussex, in England, and financed by the specially formed Columbus Trust. The funds so far raised, which have come from British sources alone, amount to $500,000. This sum was raised by the Trust within a few months.

Lord Butler is chairman of the Trust, other members including: Mr. Astor, Prof. Max Beloff, Professor of Government and Public Administration at Oxford; Lord Fulton, Vice-Chancellor of the University of Sussex; Harold Lever, M.P.; Dr. A.T.M. Wilson, of Unilever and the Tavistock Institute; and Leonard Wolfson, industrialist.

Sol M. Linowitz, chairman of the board of Xerox Corp., who earlier in the day had been elected chairman of the executive board of the American Jewish Committee, was chairman of the luncheon meeting. In introducing Mr. Astor, Mr. Linowitz explained that the Committee, in the late 1940s, following the end of World War II and of the Nazi regime in Germany, sponsored pioneering research into individual psycho-pathology.

"This research," Mr. Linowitz stated, "was published in the five-volume 'Studies in Prejudice,' whose key volume is 'The Authoritarian Personality.' By exposing prejudice as a disease and its carriers as twisted personalities, this work exerted such an effect on American life and thought that today the concept of bigotry as a mental health problem has become a cliché. The study outlined by Mr. Astor may be considered an extension of that pioneering work into the area of group prejudice and hatred, and we here may be learning about another of the great steps forward in the great work to understand and then root out bigotry."

"The American Jewish Committee regards this as a most significant project, and is anticipating cooperation with Mr. Astor and his colleagues in furthering this study, which we feel has major consequences for all of us."

In his luncheon talk, Mr. Astor explained that the studies would proceed along two lines: one, a study of the preconditions of the Nazi exterminations, with particular reference to how the victims were seen by their exterminators and by large sections of German society; the other, a "compendium of human destructiveness," which he described as "an attempt to bring together all that is now

Left, is a white mink coat, of the current Grosvenor collection. Designed with a Mandarin collar, and a loose, flared body, the coat is one of the cutest furs which are being shown now, in New York, participating in the Emba Awards; and which will be shown later, in Australia, writes Joe Biele, in the Montreal Star. This collection, of high style furs, uses fur on fur, such as a great coat of Emu fur-mink, with narrow inserts of Russian ermine, between the horizontally worked mink thins. Alaska seal had a triangle yoke of Swakara lamb; and another coat of fur on fur, had a flared skirt of lamb, and a triangle yoke of seal. A creamy white mink evening wrap was lined in gold and red brocade, and was reversible.

THE SERGEANT ADOPTS A SON

By Eliezer Whartman, in Jewish Affairs

A great deal has been written about the Israel army in a general way, but very little is known about the fighting man as an individual. In this article I should like to share with the reader a human interest story which could well be entitled "Only in Israel", for I cannot conceive of it occurring in the armed forces of any other nation. The account, written by a military correspondent, appeared in a recent issue of Bimah (At the Base), the Army publication. I have translated it literally.

He's very small, almost fragilely built. Very pale. Very quiet. That's the impression you get when you look at Isadore Yuliansky, aged eighteen.

Who knew him when he entered the army? No one, neither his fellow privates nor anyone else. They decided to call him Meir. In basic training he would lag after everyone. They jeered at him. He would stumble in his speech. He was the misfit of his battalion. He was always losing things. His uniform hung like a sack on him. He didn't know how to mend it when it tore. When everyone else went out on pass, he stayed in the barracks. He had no family, no friends, no place to go. But that was weeks ago.

Like the others, he was terrified of the First Sergeant, Marco Saban. Saban looked like a typical non-com: tall, muscularly built, mustachioed, with a voice like gravel. Everyone tried to keep out of his sight. Meir's first encounter with the dreaded giant took place in the orderly room after the little private was summoned there to explain why he hadn't properly saluted the base commander. He was unable to pry any understandable explanation from the stammering, frightened soldier.

Facing the stern faced goliath seated behind the desk, Meir began to tremble uncontrollably. Why was his uniform so unkempt, demanded the sergeant. Didn't he know how to wash it, or press it? When was the last time he was home? Didn't his mother have an iron? Why hadn't he gone home—the battalion had received passes.

Meir mumbled that he hadn't gone home because he had no home. He had no relatives or friends, neither in Israel nor anywhere else. His voice trailed off.

Saban began to soften. Later he was to recall: "I roared at him, as I would with any other private looking like that. I wanted him to know that he looked slovenly and that this was a breach of regulations. But when I heard he had no home, no place to go, I felt something squeezing me inside, in the heart."

The sergeant understood that here was an unusual case. Shouts and threats, which usually worked on other privates, wouldn't help here. He ordered two platoon corporals who were present in the room to leave. He asked Meir quietly to sit down and speak. To tell everything, everything that had happened to him, not to hide anything, that no one but the sergeant himself would hear his story, and that he, Saban, would not divulge it to anyone.

Meir began haltingly in a low, almost inaudible voice. He had received an order to talk, to explain, and he was expected to comply. Little by little the words came, and when he fumbled in Hebrew for an expression, the sergeant gently supplied it. It was an anguished tale which went back to the blood-drenched Poland of World War II.

His name was Isadore Yuliansky. Born in 1946, so his papers had stated. But he could not remember where he was born, nor who his parents were. He didn't even know their names. He remembered only that he had been born in Poland. His first recollection was of an orphanage in that country. A Jewish family that had somehow managed to survive the holocaust came to the institution and selected him. He recalled the family: Braun, of Lodz.

But he didn't stay with them very long. They transferred him to another institution where he lived for four years. In 1956, at the age of ten, he was taken by the Brauns to Israel. The Brauns moved to a transit camp, but Isadore, who had since been named Meir, was sent to a children's home in Jerusalem run by the Bnai Brith. He spent six years there, and little by little lost contact with the Brauns until he scarcely remembered them.

After he had finished the seventh grade ("with difficulty") he was assigned to another family in Beit Zayit, a farming village near Jerusalem. "It was horrible," he confided to Sergeant Saban. "They worked me like a mule. They didn't love me." In a few poignant words he thus summed up years of drudgery, bereft of the potential love which all other children had enjoyed.

That, in short, was all. When he reached eighteen, he was drafted. He had left no one behind, who would write to him, whom he wanted to visit. He entered the army. Basic training was difficult. It was hard for him to adjust. The other trainees poked fun at him.

As the story unfolded, the otherwise tough sergeant felt a stab of pain. This was no ordinary backsliding private sitting opposite him. Here was simply a helpless, confused young boy.

"I've got six children," confided Saban, "and so I could feel for the boy. I felt that something had to be done for him."

He discussed the boy with his wife, and they reached a decision: they had six children. Why not a seventh? They would provide Meir with the home he had never had.

The bewildered private received a totally unexpected order from the sergeant. He was to accompany Saban to his home on the following Sabbath.

Meir was astonished. He didn't know what to expect, but nothing could possibly make his situation worse, and so, not without a few qualms, he went home with the sergeant. Today he admits he was scared stiff. When he entered the house, a three room dwelling in Bat Yam, a suburb of Tel Aviv, he received an astonishing command. "Here," Saban informed him, "you're not to call me sergeant. Call me Dadi. That's the way the children address me."

Mr. Astor said he hoped that the study recently launched in Europe would be supplemented by a study carried out in the United States. It is understood that any American study would be concerned with the "compendium of human destructiveness" aspect of the project.

We even had the cheek to send over a small sum to finance tentative studies in California," he said, referring to a $20,000 grant to Prof. Nevitt Sanford, director of the Institute for the Study of Human Problems, at Stanford University. Professor Sanford was one of the four organizers of the research and one of the authors of "The Authoritarian Personality."

A leading British historian and behavioral psychologist said in Washington that the mass murder of Jews in Europe during the 20th Century was made possible by a "collective psychosis" under which Gentiles saw Jews as a race "endowed with superhuman, quasi-demonic powers of evil."

Sussex, England, asserted that during this period "a mass madness swept through Europe infecting vast multitudes of ordinary, normal people."

He stated that the seeds had been planted by centuries of Christian teaching that promoted the myth of the Jews as "children of the devil," which was activated the moment modern-day agitators began to play upon it.

Speaking to the meeting of the American Jewish Committee at the Sheraton Hotel, in Washington, Dr. Cohn urged a combined effort on the part of psychologists, historians, sociologists, and anthropologists to undertake research into the processes that led to these catastrophes.

In showing the operation of myth as a spur to hatred and violence, Dr. Cohn pointed out similarities between the incidents that caused murderous pogroms in Kishinev, Russia, in 1903 and 1905, and the Nazi holocaust. In both instances the "demonological view of Jewry" was brought into play. In Kishinev it was the charge of ritual murder; in Nazi Germany it was the charge that Jews had a secret government that was to blame for all the disasters that had befallen that country. "The defeat in the World War, the deflation which ruined the majority of the population, the hunger and misery, all these things were ascribed to the 'secret Jewish government,'" he said.

In each case, Dr. Cohn said, myth operated as a "faith for the fanatics, as an excuse for criminals, and for the majority of the population as a pretext to look the other way." In fact, during all the catastrophes that befell European Jewry between 1880 and 1945 there was prevalent a "widespread feeling that massacre is somehow not quite serious when the victims are 'only Jews.'"

Dr. Cohn stated that the Nazi attitude to Jews was "determined not by racist doctrine alone, but by an amalgamation of racist doctrine with the myth of the Jewish world conspiracy."

He added: "In the eyes of the most fanatical people, Nazis, Slavs, and Negroes, and so on, were sub-human 'races', but in their eyes Jews were also something more: a 'race' which from the very dawn of history, and owing to the peculiarities of its 'blood', had operated as a conspiracy to degrade, ruin, and dominate mankind."

Dr. Cohn is the author of "The Pursuit Of The Millennium," and "Warrant for Genocide: The Myth of the Jewish World-Conspiracy and the Protocols of the Elders of Zion," which will be issued by Harper & Row next February.

Founded in 1906, the American Jewish Committee is the pioneer in human relations agency in the U.S. combating bigotry, protecting the civil and religious rights of Jews, and advancing the cause of human rights for all.

HAIFA STEVEDORES

tional role as the strong-arm force for the ruling Mapai Party.

For many years their "protector" was Yosef Almog, secretary of the Haifa Labour Council. Last year, however, Mr. Almog supported Mr. Ben-Gurion in his feud with Mr. Eshkol, the Prime Minister, and defected from Mapai. He was one of the founders of the new Rami Party.

Abba Houshi, Mayor of Haifa, interceded with the port workers to assure their loyalty to Mapai rather than to Mr. Almog. In the Histadrut elections last year, they voted solidly for the Establishment and abandoned Mr. Almog. Observers at Tel Aviv believe they are now trying to collect Mapai's pre-election pledges.

However, there is no yielding to their demands without jeopardizing the Government's policy of wage restraint. Other labour groups have been watching to see whether the stevedores break the ten per cent limit before signing their own new labour contracts, says the London Times. Histadrut leaders accordingly fear that yielding to the port workers will open the floodgates.

The Long And Rocky Road To A Zionist Federation In Canada

VIEW, official publication of the Labor Zionist Movement Of Canada, says:

The Labor Zionist Movement has not acted lightly in joining with Mizrahi, Achdut Ha'Avoda and Mapam to proclaim the establishment of a Zionist Federation in Canada. For many years we have striven for Zionist unity and have made compromise after compromise in order to build the foundation for a Zionist Federation that would include the entire Zionist family. Unfortunately the Zionist Organization of Canada, which for years has run matters on its own, has been unwilling to take any meaningful steps in this direction. Almost two decades ago the United Zionist Council was formed — and subsequently re-organized several times — but the Z.O.C. consistently refused to relinquish any real authority to the Council.

In January, 1965 Dr. Nahum Goldmann, President of the World Zionist Organization intervened personally on the request of the four above-mentioned groups. At a meeting held in his office an agreement was reached which called for the establishment of a Managerial Committee which would be the supreme body in Canadian Zionism. Moreover, all Zionist groups were to be adequately represented on the Managerial Committee.

But the Z.O.C. was not prepared even to accept this agreement which was negotiated by its own top officers. For months the agreement was not ratified by the Z.O.C. and it was only after protracted negotiations during which we made still further compromises in the interests of unity that the Zionist Organization finally gave its approval and the Managerial Committee could be launched.

Right from the beginning, however, the Z.O.C. resisted every effort to transform the Managerial Committee into a viable body. They refused to call regular and frequent meetings — essential for a Committee whose function is to "manage" Zionist affairs in Canada; they refused to establish clear-cut terms of reference for the Committee; they refused to establish local and regional counterparts of the Managerial Committee; they continued to appoint chairmen of United Zionist Council Committee arbitrarily and unilaterally. In short, they did everything possible to ensure that the Managerial Committee would remain a "paper tiger" like its predecessor, the United Zionist Council.

Finally, our Movement, together with Mizrahi, Achdut Ha'Avoda and Mapam, reached the conclusion that the Managerial Committee could only function properly if it had its own staff — independent of any of its constituents — and its own budget. When they realized that the time of procrastination and half-hearted promises was coming to an end the Z.O.C. decided to scuttle the Committee rather than give it the tools it needs in order to be effective. Without consulting the other groups and without convening the Managerial Committee Lawrence Freiman sent in his resignation as Chairman of the Committee to Dr. Nahum Goldmann. He chose to announce his action at a meeting of the Canadian Committee of the Commission on the Reorganization of the World Zionist Organization. On May 15th, at a meeting of the National Executive of the Zionist Organization,

Mr. Freiman spoke in an insulting manner about the four Zionist groups and accused them of attempting to break the Zionist Organization. He also stated that he would no longer negotiate with the leaders of these organizations.

As a result of these developments our Movement concluded jointly with the above mentioned other Zionist groups that the Z.O.C. is interested in Zionist unity only on its terms: only if it can maintain its sole hegemony over Zionist affairs. We therefore had no choice but to go ahead with the establishment of a Zionist federation — with or without the Z.O.C.

Gillis, 4320 Plamondon Street. At the annual donor dinner, attended by 650 women of the Council of Units of the Jewish Hospital of Hope, at the Queen Elizabeth Hotel, Mrs. M. Pinsky, president, gave the annual report. By 350 members, a total of $53,162.76 gross was raised during the year. This brought to over $1,000,000 the monetary contribution to the Hospital since inception. The money was raised by: subscription fund, $13,275; annual bazaar, $6,653.10; donations and Unit teas etc., $14,673; souvenir program, $5,204.50; membership dues, $1,517; time books, $4,633; Golden Book, $1,346; revenue from the sale of cards (in memoriam), $83; life membership, $5,700. Of this money $2,000 was given monthly to the Hospital to help cover expenses incurred, not paid by the Government. An expenditure of $850, bought terry cloth robes for each patient. Supplies were bought for material needed for the Occupational Therapy Department Workshop; and religious articles for the chapel. The balance was used to maintain and supply equipment for the Hospital, not provided by the Quebec Hospital Act. Mrs. Pinsky reported that there were 138 patients and the Hospital was filled to capacity. There was a long waiting list for admission, a situation, she said that could be relieved only if there was more space. Patients were referred to the Hospital of Hope by the general hospitals when it was determined that their condition had become chronic and would involve a lengthy stay in the Hospital than a general hospital could afford. It was the policy of the members of the Council of Units to involve themselves not only in raising funds for the Hospital, she said, but also toward the sociological and psychological problems inherent in patients who must endure long hospitalization, diversion and entertainment were created for them by frequent parties and concerts with Council members present. On special occasions gifts were provided for each patient. Mrs. Pinsky paid tribute to these groups and individuals who entertained at these functions: Rabbi Isaac Teicher, of Beth Hillel Synagogue; Cantor Benjamin Haas, of Adath Israel Synagogue; Reverend Solomon Gisser, and daughter, Miss Helen Gisser, of Shaare Zion Synagogue; Cantor Goodman Aronson of Spanish and Portuguese Synagogue; Daise Wellfare, Syracuse Lodge No. 9, Knights of Pythias, who gave monthly concerts from November to June, arranged for by Hyman Bercoy, through the courtesy of L. Horowitz, Steven S. Wise, Lodge of Knights of Pythias, Lennie Rubin and his group (courtesy of Musician's Guild of Montreal); Rose Welfare Group, The Life Membership roll, as reported by Mrs. S. Cohen, chairman with Mrs. Florence Jacobson, had grown to 325 fully paid members. Such membership is $100, which may be paid in whole or on the installment plan. The name, when fully paid, is inscribed on a bronze tablet, on view at the hospital. During the past year, an advisory board was inaugurated, composed of past chairmen of projects, to function as a standby committee for special events. Awards were made to:

Esther Oberfield Memorial Trophy for sales in the subscription fund: first place to Mrs. H. Bercoy, of Chaim Revzen Junior Unit, for selling the most subscriptions as an individual; first place to the Unit selling the most subscriptions, Chaim Revzen Junior Unit, Mrs. H. THE SERGEANT ADOPTS A SON

The new expression came hard to Meir. It was difficult to make the transition from Sergeant to Dad, and when he occasionally lapsed and used Saban's military title, he encountered a rebuking stare. Timidly at first, but with growing assurance, Meir switched to Dad.

Saban and his wife soon realized they would have to teach Meir certain basic things: how to do his washing; how to iron. Nobody had ever troubled to teach him that before. "We dressed him in our oldest boy's clothing," recalls Saban. "We made him feel one of the family."

Little by little the ice was broken, thanks in no small measure to the children who insisted on his joining them in their games.

When he returned to the base after that first Sabbath, Meir took a new interest in things about him, and worked harder at being a soldier. The story of the adoption spread through the camp. The word got around that Meir was no longer to be the butt of any jokes — not that it was simply unkind; it didn't pay. Saban took a dim view of it. One just didn't tease the First Sergeant's son.

Meir grew close to the family. The kids were proud of him. "Our oldest brother is in the Army," they would boast to their friends. And when Meir had a personal problem, he would always take it to Mom.

Meir today is in Bilat, serving at that outpost on the Red Sea. Before he left he had a little consultation with Dad. "What shall I do after I finish my army service?" Meir would like to make the army his career, but Dad feels that he should learn a trade.

When Meir comes home on weekends there's joy in the house. The children look forward to his arrival all week, and he regales them with stories about life on the base. If he

Or sit at the bar with a friend all night long and make friends with our chief bartender. (He's very easy to make friends with — after which, he pours drinks like you were his personal guest... he's gotta go.) And you can do all this at 2 nightclubs. So if you and your wife have a fight, you can tell each other where to go. (To the other night club.) Of course we've got dozens of daytime sports and activities not to mention our 18 hole championship golf course. But you're tired, now, aren't you? You've been up all night carousing... You're sleepy... wake up Lenny... Lenny, wake up... It's time for dinner... Lenny... Lenny...

JEWISH TRADITION AND POLITICAL ACTION

By Rabbi Richard J. Israel, director Bnei Brith Hillel Foundation, Yale University, in the Jewish Frontier. Rabbi Israel is still out on bail after his arrest as participant in the August, 1963, Albany, Georgia, "Prayer Pilgrimage", while publicly reading a Psalm.

Rabbi Seymour Seigel put it rather well when he said that we could use the tradition in these areas of social concern as a goal, a guide, and a goal; a goal, in that it pricks us into caring; a guide, in that it presents us with some limitations and suggested lines of action; a goal, in that it gives us a vision of the ideal future for which we are working.

It is a very dangerous method which I am proposing. I am an enormous risk of tendentiousness, of being biased, deceitful, deceiving myself more than anyone else, and of presenting my own vision of the truth as the tradition's vision. To use such a method legitimately, I am obligated to be more Jewishly literate than I am ever likely to become.

In spite of all these qualifications, it must be this way for me. I have no alternative but to live a life of commitment plagued by great doubts. I must act without hesitancy out of information that is questionable. I know that I shall never have certain answers or even very good answers to most of the questions that I am asking — not even to the important questions; but there is too much to do in the world to wait for all of the answers to be in.

All of the major decisions of my life — whether choosing a school, a wife or an occupation — are made upon insufficient information. Yet since someone is going to be making the major decisions of my life, it might as well be me.

Let me detail some of my attempts at synthesis. I shall begin with some of the social attitudes that I have derived from my tradition. I present them as truths and as traditional Jewish values, for you already know my qualifications.

I am a Jew and I am living in the 20th century. I cannot deny either my modernity or my Jewishness. The form of government to which I gave my warm affection is Western democracy. I am a liberal and a civil libertarian. I am strongly affected by the claims of my conscience and I believe that others ought to have the right to respond to the claims of theirs. These attitudes do not make me a better Jew. They do not emerge from the Jewish tradition, yet are part and parcel of me.

Democracy has never been a Jewish value. The Messianic state was a kind of constitutional monarchy. That people should vote regularly on important issues when the Messiah comes is unthinkable and silly. Not only in an ultimate Messianic state, but in the governing of self-contained Jewish communities throughout history, democracy has been far more the exception than the rule. There was voting within the governing bodies, but the representatives were rarely elected.

In the realm of civil liberties, it is clear that due process and the rights of the accused are wonderfully protected by Jewish law, but freedom of speech or the press were unknown. The unconventional mind had difficulties in surviving within the community.

The appeal to conscience was in-relevant. If one is dealing with absolute truth, as the classical literature does, dissent has no place. There might be disagreement as to what the law should be or what ritual should be observed, but once the decision was made, one did exactly what the rest of the community did except within the narrowest of limitations.

For example, the claim of a non-religious person in Israel who says, "I do not believe in religious marriage and I demand the freedom to be civilly married in accord with my own beliefs," would carry absolutely no weight in most religious circles.

I have grave difficulties in identifying with these aspects of my tradition because of the values which I previously enumerated which are a very important part of me. But I am not only a 20th century American liberal. I am also a Jew and that is also very much a part of the core of my being. So I engage myself seriously with the Jewish tradition, its texts and teachers, and in this engagement I find other positions, supplementing and challenging my Western values.

It is true that Judaism is not greatly interested in democracy, but it is passionately concerned with justice and I can respond to that. The tradition does not care what kind of government there is. But it cares very much that people be treated fairly and equally.

This forces me to pause before I try to export my form of government to another culture and another continent. It may be that two houses of Congress, a President, and a Supreme Court are the best way to govern my particular land justly, but it is by no means clear to me that it is the only way to govern other lands.

I know that my own country is important to me, but I know, too, that no state is of ultimate value. The rules governing the relations between people are important, but no nation state really is, except insofar as it promotes justice in the relationships between men. I am in favor of social legislation which will promote a more equitable distribution of the good things of this world for all men, for the welfare of the community is far more important than the right of private property. After all, the earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof, the world and they that dwell therein (Psalm 24). It is not mine. It is the Lord's world and he wants justice.

It is not only my life that belongs to the Lord, but the lives of all the other people in this world as well. They are not mine to take at will. The earth of my nation belongs to the Lord, and the earth of Viet Nam as well. I find it difficult to believe that my tradition which would not sanction the cutting down of an enemy's fruit trees at a time of siege on the ground that they are the Lord's, would allow the burning of wheat stores or the bombing of irrigation dams.

Given my tradition's reservations about nation states, I find it a little hard to understand some attitudes about other nations that seem to be one of my nation's patriotic requirements. Twenty years ago, all Japanese had buck teeth, wore heavy glasses, and were hideous, fanatical fiends. Now they wear colorful, native costumes, arrange flowers, drink tea in charming rituals and are the bulwark of democracy in Asia.

The Nazis were murderers to a man. A good German did not exist. Teutonic viciousness was a national trait. Suddenly I discover that all that Germans want to do in this world is to drink beer glasses, sing joyous songs, and hurry about being efficient; indeed, the only efficient nation in Europe, and thus responsible for the miraculous economic recovery of the continent. The Chinese, of course, have gone in the other direction and De Gaulle should be forewarned that unless he begins to treat us with proper deference, we shall shortly begin to discover just how effete the French are and that the grand manner is really just a cover-up for an inner core of rottenness.

In none of this nonsense is there any assumption that the citizens of all countries are people. The common humanity that we share is the uniqueness of each man, each with his own particular combination of strengths and weaknesses which can lead him to do terrible things or encourage him to do wondrously virtuous ones, regardless of whether his government and ours happen to be allies at this particular moment.

But though I do not believe that my government or nation necessarily finds more favor in God's eyes than does my neighbor's, neither do I believe that his finds more favor than mine. I have every right to defend myself. (I must be exceedingly cautious about how I utilize the notion of defense; for in the rhetoric of modern nations, both sides engaged in a war are somehow always defending themselves. No one is ever an aggressor.)

If I am honestly defending myself, defense is a religious obligation. This means that I would not only be foolish, but immoral to lay down my arms before an enemy. Thus I would hold that as I understand the Jewish tradition, any kind of total unilateral disarmament without careful and tight inspection that would be enforceable is wrong, for not only would the Russians or the Chinese exploit me were I to so disarm, I quite believe that we would exploit them were they to do so.

I am intrigued by Osgood's notion of peace initiatives in which each side agrees to reduce its armaments by a significant but not all important unit, waiting until the other side responds with a comparable act. This I think is in accord with what I understand to be the Jewish view.

Again, I know that every man is created in the image of God and that to despise my fellow man is to despise the living God. The Midrash tells me to cast myself in a fiery furnace before I consent to embarrass or humiliate my neighbor. I find that I am daily complying in the humiliation of our Negro neighbors by denying them access to the housing, education, and employment that people with white skins and the same ability are able to obtain.

Thus, I must enter into the maelstrom of the demonstration with all of its hazards, as the most effective means presently available to gain speedy public recognition of critical issues. I know that I am descended from slaves and can hardly afford to disparage others who are descended from slaves.

I am not stopped by a call for civil disobedience, for law that is not God's law has no real metaphysical or ultimate status. Law's only function is to promote peace in the land. Peace, however, is not the absence of tension, but the presence of justice. If the law does not promote justice, it is not a law which I have an obligation to follow. But I must disobey in such a way that I show my respect for what the law ought to represent. I must submit to its punishments to recall the law to its own intentions, purposes and obligations: the promotion of justice.

I have attempted to suggest the following: that the Biblical and Halachic traditions are no longer generating the kind of continuous guidance that we need for the world in which we live. The contemporary Jewish community is more likely to derive its answers to these kinds of questions from its own sociological status.

We can, however, let the tradition challenge us as we try to respond to that challenge as honestly and fully as we can. Jewish tradition still possesses great vitality even though it does not always provide us with complete answers. It gives us a chance to stand back from our totally contemporary perspective and view our problem through other eyes.
